AnalogX CookieWall For Windows 2022 [New]

- Easily and quickly configures CookieWall to delete unwanted cookies as soon as they arrive. - Autoremove unwanted cookies from your system when needed. - If you prefer to check out new cookies for yourself, rather than having them automatically queued, set up your checks here. - View, manage and edit your 'Requested Cookies' list. - Settings can be configured for each website. What's New Version 2.6.2: - Added the ability to set up autoremove cookie requests. - Added settings for which cookies to disable. - Added settings for which cookies to enable. - Some minor bugfixes. Enjoy! Does the free version have the functionality of removing cookies when the browser is closed (for the same reasons that it doesn't delete them when you open the browser)? Thanks for the comment. While the free version does not have a full delete functionality (for the same reasons that you don't have a full delete functionality), the free version does have the ability to delete cookies immediately when the browser is closed (if the settings on your browser allow this). If you like the program, but you want to be able to delete cookies when you close the browser without using the free version, we also have a paid version that has that functionality. You can check out our other programs in the 'Supporting' section of our website. Anybody who has tried to do away with IE's auto delete has, I'm sure, realised there are a bunch of things that don't work right! (a) I can't for example use IE 7's delete onclose functionality to clear the cookies from another browser because it won't work! (b) I can't use a.txt file to record the delete onclose cookies! I just get a lot of error messages. (Sorry - I've spent the last 3 days on this - but it's got me stumped!) The one that really blows me away is: I can't even get it to show the Onclose functionality as an option to delete when I close the browser. Why is it so invisible?? I don't know if it's the programmers' incompetence or just the way IE works - but it's no good on my system. It's amazing how often an innovative program is ditched by its creator after some years due to incompatibility with the market leader's products. I've seen the same thing happen with 1d6a3396d6
