Getting started with Photoshop Windows users use Photoshop via the Photoshop.com web site to access the program or to download the latest version of Photoshop. For Mac users, use the App Store, as shown in Figure 9-1. You can download the latest version of the full program or download one of the Lightroom modules. Be sure to check for updates in your Downloads folder. Chapter 14 shows you the basics of working with a Photoshop Lightroom module. Keep in mind that you need Photoshop Lightroom to use the downloaded modules, and Lightroom is different from Photoshop. Photos that you download through the Photoshop.com web site or use with Lightroom are saved in the _.psd_ file format. These photos are also editable using a program called Photoshop. You may also use Adobe's free photo manipulation program, Photoshop Elements. These programs enable you to create the most basic adjustments and retouchings in your image. They are ideal for beginning retouching or creating basic photo collages. Don't expect to retouch your image using only the Mac (or Windows) application. Photoshop Elements (available for download for free) runs on your Mac just fine. Figure 9-1: Download the latest version of Photoshop or one of the modules using the App Store. | --- | --- Photoshop Elements is a program that enables you to work on your images using layers, like the traditional Photoshop. Unlike Photoshop, you can do a lot more with Elements, so it's more like a graphics and image editor than a traditional photo editor. Be aware that Elements is part of the Photoshop family of programs, so if you are not already familiar with the traditional Photoshop editing process, check out the basics in Chapter 6.

Q: Does licensing prevent PayPal IPN? This is related to the question about IPN for paypal.com, but: If I don't use a licensing payment gateway, but instead just collect the money and create the transaction myself, is the IPN still working, and is there a way for a rogue seller to set up a test account to receive a username and password from and to use to try to steal money from me? Is the IPN just for license payment gateways? A: No, the IPN script is just a one-time interface that the gateway provides for you to transfer money to you. All the gateway does is relay the IPN data to you and you can proceed from there. You don't need the IPN script to actually send the money. When PayPal runs the script on their end, they'll ask you to verify that you sent the right money to the right person, which is usually a somewhat complicated process. All they're really verifying is that the amount was sent for the given customer/merchant combination. Lion Player and FilmOn adapt and continues to deliver original content Lion Player and FilmOn adapt and continues to deliver original content Lion Media, the UK-based content and media company with a commercial licensing business and an online content streaming service that combines high quality programmes from around the globe, and FilmOn, the FilmOn.com and FilmOn.TV free mobile video streaming service, have announced that they have signed a new deal to continue delivering original content on both platforms. In light of the numerous reports that have shown a continued existence of antibiotic-resistant bacteria in the ocean, a San Diego State University professor is developing a process that does not use antibiotics to treat the food that is served. Although it sounds counterintuitive, Dr. Renee Steiner, director of the Biosystems Engineering Research Center at the university, said that this actually may be a more effective approach. "Biosystems is an engineering-based, multifaceted program that explores new engineering ideas and develops new technologies for addressing ocean resources challenges," Steiner said. "We don't use antibiotics, which are poisons in the ocean, but at the same time, we're investigating other ways to kill bacteria that are harmful to the food chain and that could promote the growth of other microbes that are more beneficial to the fish." Previous experiments have shown that the addition of chlorine and copper to the water can kill a lot of the harmful bacteria. Steiner said that although this is effective, it also kills much of the healthy bacteria. She added that it is extremely difficult to monitor the results of this method since not many people would have the skills necessary to test it out. "What the public would notice is if you're eating fish and they just don't taste good. And maybe you don't even realize you're eating a contaminated fish," Steiner said. "But now you're eating a piece of fish that doesn't taste good. So, it may be one thing and may be the other thing. It depends on the concentration of the bacteria, if they are harmful or not." Although she said that the process could be improved, Steiner said that she is hopeful that the public will be willing to give this technology a try. "We need to have sufficient amounts of food, but that doesn't mean we should sacrifice the public's quality of food and life," she said. "We should move in the direction that's good for everybody, because we're all in it together." While the process is still in its developmental stages, Steiner said that there are quite a few advantages. With non-toxic materials, the end product will actually be able to be sold, she explained. The process is also less wasteful and allows the food to be preserved, potentially for longer.. 3. Cognitive Performance.
