freud wanted to say that he was following a dream of the patient, which had occurred before his arrival. this dream had been accompanied by psychosomatic symptoms, which she interpreted as sexual, having herself submitted to a sexual relation with a rat, which provoked her to persecute the rat in her dreams, and made her feel guilty, which led to a depression. freud did not necessarily make a connection between the dream and the symptoms, but he believed they were linked through the sexual element. freud learned that the patient had been sexually abused at the age of 4, by a man she had mistaken for her father. those freud and the daughters had a business relationship and a sexual relationship. where did freud get the information about freud and daughter living together? freuds daughter said that freud was the father of his daughter, and the sisters, freuds daughters, were living together. the sisters were staying there to do their literary work. what has been said about the memory is that the daughter used to dream about the past events, to remember them, and then the memories of the past would emerge in the dream. the daughter is aware of the past events but she still could not remember them. freud used to tell her that the events were too painful, and so she could not remember them. freud also told her that, there was no use in telling her these painful things. freud said that the memories of the past would emerge in her dream, but if she tells the same to anyone, it would be the past events, which she does not remember. this is what was happening with the daughter and the sisters. the sisters were the daughters of freud. the writer of the story, the daughter, has remembered the events of the past, and the writer had not been able to remember those things. freud thinks that dreams occur when the mind and the unconscious memory try to make some sense of the experiences of the past. freud then told the daughter that she could remember the events, if only she could recall the memory. freud told her that there was no use telling others the painful memories, because, they are not painful. the writer of the story, the daughter, had been diagnosed as having obsessive compulsive disorder.

in this book, freud presents his theory of the unconscious, mainly based on the theory of the latent content. the concept of the unconscious is at the heart of the psychoanalytic method. it also plays an important role in the understanding of the role of dreams in the human psyche. in this book, freud also presents his view on the reality of the super-ego and his defense against the critics that accused him of plagiarism. in general, he attempts to show that the ideas of the critics do not correspond to the real content of his theories. in the first chapter, freud explains what is meant by the term dream, and introduces the basic concepts that are necessary for understanding the dream. the chapter begins by talking about how dreams work and introduces the most important themes related to the study of dreams. the next chapter will be devoted to studying the dream process, and the process of the formation of dreams from the unconscious, until the moment of the dream itself. freud emphasizes the dream as a formation of the psyche, a complex product of the id, ego, and superego. the dreams are the products of the id, which contain a representation of all those wishes and impulses that are unconscious. freud also points to the fact that some dreams express the unconscious desires of the ego. the fourth chapter analyzes the role of the superego in dreams, which are the expression of the ego. the superego expresses what are called ego ideals, which are the rules and restrictions that the ego has with respect to the id. the following chapter begins by focusing on the dream-work, i.e., the work that the dreamer does on his or her own during a dream. freud also emphasizes the psychoanalytic approach to dreams and the importance of this approach. he then describes the three kinds of dreams and the classification of the dream-work, as well as the dreamer's experiences of dreams. 5ec8ef588b
